

ALLIANZ CENTER FOR THE FUTURE OF RETIREMENT®

Driving improved financial security for Hispanic Americans

Helping financial professionals build culturally intelligent strategies that better reflect and support clients' values, goals, and lived experiences

Hispanic Americans are often optimistic about the future and motivated by a desire to create opportunities for themselves and their loved ones. Understanding how long-term goals, family responsibilities, and everyday financial realities influence their decision-making can help financial professionals build stronger relationships and deliver more personalized guidance. As part of a global company, Allianz is uniquely positioned to help financial professionals with research-driven cultural insights and retirement risk-management strategies to deliver meaningful solutions to their clients that are designed to strengthen long-term financial security.

Optimistic about the future – but without a clear roadmap

Many Hispanic Americans feel confident about their ability to achieve their financial goals. Yet confidence does not always come with a formal strategy. The lack of a written strategy can leave long-term goals vulnerable to unexpected setbacks.

70% feel confident about being able to financially support all the things they want to do in life

47% do not have a written financial plan

By generation

66% Millennials 65% Gen X 72% Boomers

By gender

77% Men 62% Women

By generation

42% Millennials 51% Gen X 52% Boomers

By gender

42% Men 51% Women

Confidence isn't necessarily lacking, but without a written plan, even the best intentions can stall. This gap is especially pronounced among women, who report lower confidence and planning rates. Financial professionals can step in by aligning top goals – from retirement to debt reduction – with a strategy that brings clarity, structure, and long-term security.

Allianz Center for the Future of Retirement® conducted the 2026 Annual Retirement Study in January 2026 with a nationally representative sample of 1,000 respondents age 25+ with an annual household income of $50K+/$75K+ (single/married) OR investable assets of $150K+. The study also included an additional sample of respondents who identified as Black/African American (400 responses); Hispanic (407 responses); Asian/Asian American (356 responses).

The Allianz Center for the Future of Retirement® produces insights and research as a part of Allianz Life Insurance Company of North America.

EXT-1125 (R-7/2026)

Hopeful about retirement. Hindered by reality.

Retirement is filled with meaning for Hispanic Americans, but financial realities often delay or derail preparation. For many, retirement represents more than just the end of a career. It's seen as a time to explore passions, support loved ones, and pursue new goals. Competing priorities, day-to-day expenses, and a lack of clear strategies can make it difficult to take the next step.

64% aren't saving as much for retirement
as they'd like

61% aren't sure how to plan beyond basic retirement account
contributions

66% say they're juggling so many financial goals that it's difficult to prioritize

When asked what is keeping them from saving as much as they would like for retirement, these three
rose to the top:

Expenses for day-to-day
necessities taking priority

Credit
card debt

Housing
debt

Taking a 'figure it out' approach

When retirement goals compete with immediate financial demands, planning for the future can begin to feel overwhelming. Many Hispanic Americans acknowledge uncertainty about how to move forward, leading some to delay planning altogether or take a less structured approach to retirement preparation.

48%
Say they don't have a retirement
plan and will just figure it out when they get there
(vs. 42% overall)

50% Feel they're already too far behind on their retirement goals to catch up (vs. 46% overall)

56% Say people should live more for today than prepare for tomorrow given so much uncertainty in the world (vs. 50% overall)

47% Do not have a specific age in mind for retirement

Many Hispanic American clients already envision a fulfilling retirement. What they need is help bringing it to life. By offering personalized, values-based strategies, financial professionals can help turn long-term dreams into achievable plans.

Confidence can coexist with concern

Optimism about the future doesn't eliminate uncertainty about the path ahead. Many Hispanic Americans are working toward important financial goals, yet concerns about market volatility, retirement income, and financial security remain. These findings suggest that confidence and caution often go hand in hand, creating opportunities for financial professionals to help clients navigate uncertainty while staying focused on long-term objectives.

Market volatility remains a concern:

Two in three (66%) worry that having nearly all of their retirement savings in the stock market makes them vulnerable to losing too much money

Three in five (61%) feel anxious about their future financial well-being when their retirement accounts suffer a loss due to a market drop

Three in four (78%) would prefer automatic withdrawals from retirement savings so they don't have to closely monitor and stress over account balances

Planning for retirement isn't only about accumulating assets. It's also about creating confidence that retirement savings can weather uncertainty and support future income needs. Financial professionals can help clients evaluate strategies designed to balance growth potential with a level of protection.

Guidance is valued, yet many are going it alone

Despite concerns about retirement readiness and market volatility, relatively few Hispanic Americans currently work with a financial professional. Yet most say professional guidance would help them achieve the financial future they want.

Just 33% of Hispanic Americans currently work with a financial professional

By generation	26%	29%	51%
	Millennials	Gen X	Boomers

By gender	36%	31%
	Men	Women

87%

say working with a financial professional would help ensure they can financially support the life they want

Hispanic Americans see the value in professional guidance – but many, especially women, aren't accessing it. This is your opportunity to meet clients where they are and offer culturally relevant, trust-driven support that turns intent into impact.

How a financial professional can help

Turning goals into a clearer path forward

Many Hispanic Americans have a strong vision for the future, yet competing priorities, planning uncertainty, and concerns about retirement readiness can make it difficult to know where to start. Financial professionals can help bring greater clarity to the planning process by helping clients align today's financial decisions with the future they want to achieve.

68% say they're more worried about outliving their money than dying.

Concerns about outliving retirement savings may create opportunities for planning conversations around:

- Increasing retirement savings
- Managing current spending
- Incorporating solutions that can provide lifetime income

When asked what they value most in a financial professional, Hispanic American respondents said:

- 1 Ensuring their money lasts a lifetime
- 2 Maximizing return on investments
- 3 Protecting savings from market loss
- 4 Balancing budget to both save money and enjoy life now
- 5 Create a financial plan that allows them to retire on their own terms

Many Hispanic American clients are looking for more than investment guidance alone. They want help navigating important financial decisions while balancing the goals, responsibilities, and priorities that shape their lives. Financial professionals can create value by helping clients establish a strategy, prepare for uncertainty, and move toward retirement with greater confidence and purpose.

Beyond the numbers

As part of Allianz SE, a global company with operations in more than 70 countries, Allianz Life has the cultural insights to help financial professionals meet the evolving needs of a multicultural client base.

We understand that financial decisions are shaped by a wide range of goals, priorities, and life experiences. That's why we're proud to offer a range of retirement and risk management solutions through annuities and life insurance designed to support lasting financial security for all.

Our tools, insights, and resources can help financial professionals build trust, strengthen relationships, and create new opportunities for growth.

Allianz Life Insurance Company of North America, Allianz Life Insurance Company of New York, and Allianz Life Financial Services, LLC are affiliated companies. All are part of Allianz Group.

Annuities and life insurance are issued by Allianz Life Insurance Company of North America, 5701 Golden Hills Drive, Minneapolis, MN 55416-1297. www.allianzlife.com. In New York, annuities are issued by Allianz Life Insurance Company of New York, 1633 Broadway, 42nd Floor, New York, NY 10019-7585. www.allianzlife.com/new-york. Registered index-linked annuities are distributed by their affiliate, Allianz Life Financial Services, LLC, member FINRA, 5701 Golden Hills Drive, Minneapolis, MN 55416-1297. 800.542.5427. Only Allianz Life Insurance Company of New York is authorized to offer annuities in the state of New York.