

Strengthening financial security for Asian Americans

Helping financial professionals build culturally intelligent strategies that better reflect and support clients' values, goals, and lived experiences

Asian and Asian American clients often bring a distinct combination of long-term focus, proactive saving behaviors, and goal-oriented financial decision-making to the planning process. Understanding the motivations behind those behaviors can help financial professionals create stronger relationships, deliver more personalized guidance, and build trust through conversations that reflect what matters most to clients. As part of a global company, Allianz is uniquely positioned to help financial professionals with research-driven cultural insights and retirement risk-management strategies to deliver meaningful solutions to their clients that are designed to strengthen long-term financial security.

Purposeful planning starts with proactive saving

Asian Americans are building strong financial foundations while keeping retirement firmly in focus.

They express confidence in achieving their financial goals, and their approach reflects a desire to create future opportunities while maintaining flexibility to pursue personal goals and priorities.

Allianz Center for the Future of Retirement® conducted the 2026 Annual Retirement Study in January 2026 with a nationally representative sample of 1,000 respondents age 25+ with an annual household income of $50K+/$75K+ (single/married) OR investable assets of $150K+. The study also included an additional sample of respondents who identified as Black/African American (400 responses); Hispanic (407 responses); Asian/Asian American (356 responses).

Retirement is a top priority

Asian Americans are strong savers with ambitious goals. Many Asian and Asian American individuals are already taking meaningful steps to prepare for the future and are likely to view financial planning as a means to fulfill life goals, not just accumulate wealth.

77% say saving for retirement is one of their top financial priorities (vs. 69% overall)

71% view financial planning as a way to pursue the life they want, not just a means to reach a monetary goal.

Financial professionals can help refine the “how” while honoring the “why” behind financial decisions. Many Asian and Asian American clients are already highly engaged in preparing for retirement. A comprehensive long-term financial strategy can help them use their financial discipline to create the life they want.

Confidence in the future doesn't eliminate concern

When it comes to planning for retirement, Asian Americans are thinking critically about what could disrupt it. Even disciplined savers worry that risks can create challenges for long-term financial security. Asian and Asian American respondents express elevated concern about several factors that could impact retirement income and long-term financial security. More express anxiety around cognitive decline and how it could affect their financial independence later in life.

Concerns about cognitive decline and financial self-management

When asked about the greatest risks to retirement income, Asian/Asian Americans focused on:

Inflation

41% say rising everyday costs could make basic expenses unaffordable

Health care

37% are concerned about health care expenses in retirement

Market volatility

36% worry about the stock market dropping and losing money in retirement accounts

Longevity

35% say they're concerned about outliving their money

Preparing for a long retirement means preparing for both possibilities and vulnerabilities. Financial professionals can help clients feel more in control by introducing strategies designed to address inflation, health care expenses, market volatility, and longevity risk.

Market volatility elevates worry about financial setbacks

Asian Americans demonstrate elevated concern about potential setbacks in retirement. Many Asian and Asian American respondents are taking thoughtful steps to prepare for retirement. Yet financial confidence does not eliminate concern about the challenges that could affect long-term financial security.

Market volatility remains a concern

Retirement is a priority – but support is missing

Even as many Asian Americans proactively prepare for retirement, few are working with a financial professional to guide the way. Asian Americans consistently demonstrate a commitment to preparing for the future – but they’re largely working on their own and without a plan in place. They are among the least likely to have a written financial plan or be working with a financial professional.

Currently working with a financial professional

Many Asian Americans are prioritizing retirement – but not seeking the guidance to achieve their goals. With engagement especially low among millennials and Gen X, financial professionals have a meaningful opportunity to step in. Offering culturally intelligent, personalized strategies can help turn disciplined savings into long-term confidence.

How a financial professional can help

Tailored strategies for helping clients turn preparation into long-term confidence

Even with high savings confidence and retirement-focused behavior, many Asian and Asian American respondents say they worry about outliving their money more than death itself. Concerns about growing assets, market volatility, longevity, and taxes persist even among those who are actively saving and investing. Financial professionals can help turn preparation into a comprehensive retirement strategy tailored to their personal situation and goals.

Strong savings habits are only part of the picture.

While many Asian and Asian American clients have already developed strong financial habits, their concerns signal a need for deeper support. Financial professionals can help build on that foundation with thoughtful, personalized strategies that address risks while customizing to meet their personal goals.

When asked what they value most in a financial professional, Asian American respondents said:

- 1 Maximize return on investments
- 2 Help protect savings from market loss
- 3 Ensure my money lasts my lifetime
- 4 Develop a plan to minimize tax burden
- 5 Provide a plan tailored to my personal situation and goals
