Please note:

- Your rate will be based on the Index Effective Date. If you elect a deferred Index Effective Date, your Index Effective Date will be different from your issue date. The Index Effective Date cannot be the 29th, 30th, or 31st of a month. On those days we change the Index Effective Date to be the next business day. This is important because if you want the earliest Index Effective Date and your issue date is one of these three days, your Index Effective Date will be different from your issue date.
- Initial rates for new contracts are set on the Index Effective Date, which is the first Term Start Date, and is the first date your money has the opportunity to be allocated to an index option.
- Once the contract is issued, these rates can change on each new Term Start Date at the discretion of the company and subject to the guaranteed minimums.
